A 100-kDa fragment of phytase from the bacterium Pseudomonas fluorescens was prepared and evaluated for its ability to degrade L-cysteine. The active fragment degraded L-cysteine (approximately 2.4 micromol min⁻¹ mg protein⁻¹) at a much higher rate than L-cysteine. The inactive fragment degraded L-cysteine less efficiently than the active fragment, indicating that the active region has the ability to degrade L-cysteine in the presence of the rest of the molecule. The degradation of L-cysteine by the active fragment was also stimulated by small oligopeptides and L-cysteine sulphoxide, but not by L-cysteine itself or L-cysteine disulphide. The degradation of L-cysteine by the active fragment was kinetically similar to the reaction carried out by the active phytase. The greatest stimulation in L-cysteine degradation was observed in the presence of the dipeptide Glu-Asp. These results suggest that the active region of phytase has the capacity to hydrolyse L-cysteine and that small oligopeptides can accelerate the degradation of L-cysteine by the active region. int nup, *indx, *pivcol; int *nptr, *indxcol, *pivrow, i, j; for (i = 1; i
